Dear Benjamin,

On behalf of everyone at Boston Youth Farm Project, thank you for your generous gift of $258. Your support helps us bring classroom grow labs to more students across Boston.

For most of the students we work with, this will be the first vegetable they have ever grown. They plant kale, arugula and radish microgreens a week apart and care for them each day until harvest, when the class sits down to eat what they grew together. Sook Yeo, a science teacher at the Edison K-8 School, put it simply: “Most of all, they loved to eat the microgreens, I wish we had more of these experiences for more students.” Thank you for making that possible!

Each lab stays at its school after the program ends, so support like yours keeps growing with new classes in the years ahead.

Thank you again for your generosity and for investing in our students.

With gratitude,

Oliver Homberg

Director, Boston Youth Farm Project
